Category 1: These varieties produce flowers from the mature growth of the previous season. These plants should be allowed to finish blooming in the very early spring before they are pruned, therefore pruning should take place in late spring or early summer. The vine should then be fertilized and trained back on to its support in anticipation of the next year's show. Some of the category one clematis varieties will produce a modest show of bloom in the fall as well.

Category 2: These varieties will produce flower bud from both old and new growth. Early blooming will come from last year's mature growth while later in the summer and early fall more blooms will be produced from the current year's growth. Clematis in category two should not require major pruning. Pruning can be used to keep the vines growth in check and to remove any dead or weak growth. This should be done after the early blooming period. The old seed heads from the early blooms should be removed. This will help to maximize blooming later on in the year.

Category 3: These varieties produce flowers from the current year's growth. This clematis tends to flower mid to late summer. They should be pruned in early spring, just as the dormant vine begins to grow. This should be a hard pruning leaving only one or two nodes of growth above the ground. This type of pruning will encourage vigorous growth.
