Category 1 (none): These varieties produce their flowers directly from the old stems and, therefore, should not be pruned until all flowering has been completed. Remove all dead and weak stems after flowering. Tie all stems into position immediately after pruning. A well-established plant should not require any pruning.

Category 2 (moderate): These varieties will produce flowers on the old or previous season's stems. The pruning and tying of stems should be done in early spring when weather permits. Remove all dead and weak stems, and trim the remaining stems five to eight inches to where strong pair of leaf buds appear. All the remaining stems should be tied in a position that gives sufficient space for new growth.

Category 3 (hard): These varieties produce flowers on new growth each year. All old growth must be removed to all the current season's stems room to grow, giving the plant a fresh start each year. Prune this group in late April or early May depending on the weather conditions. Pruning consists of removing all old top growth down to where the strong new leaf axil buds appear, just above the base of the previous season's stems.
